In this whole wide universe nothing is more precious to man than Wisdom. The ancients therefore, aimed at attaining wisdom as their supreme spiritual goal known by the Greek term philo-sophia viz. Love of Wisdom. Even prior to the Greeks, Wisdom or medha of the Gods was the central concept of the Aryan Veda too. Under Vedic influence the whole chapter 8 of the famous Biblical Book of Proverbs by king Solomon is entirely devoted to Wisdom. There is, however, a region in Europe inhabited by the people who aimed in not so distant past against common sense and good reason at the assassination of Wisdom without blinking of their eyes, thus bringing calamity, disaster and catastrophe not merely to their past and present, but equally to their future.

Introduction

Wisdom vs. Black Principle (Bosnian summer omen -the assassination of Wisdom by Black Princip(le))

The ominous event of June 28th, 1914 in Sarajevo, Bosnia, the Balkans, filled with strikingly prophetic symbolism, whereby Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria, (heir presumptive to the Austro-Hungarian throne) and his wife, Sophie [viz. "WISDOM"] were assassinated by Gavrilo Princip (the short hypocoristic form of his name Gavro is related to the word gavran viz. "raven, the Black ominous bird" whence comes the meaning "Black or Blacky". The surname Princip is the Slavic spelling of the word "Principle", after German pronunciation "Prinzip").

The assassin Gavrilo Princip, was a member of the Young Bosnia (a revolutionary movement active in the Condominium of Bosnia and Herzegovina before World War I. The members were predominantly school students, primarily Serbs, but also Muslims and Croats. There were two key ideologies promoted amongst the members of the group—the Yugoslavist (unification into a Yugoslavia) and the Pan-Serb (unification into Serbia). Young Bosnia was inspired from a variety of ideas, movements, and events, such as German romanticism, anarchism, Russian revolutionary socialism, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Friedrich Nietzsche, and the Battle of Kosovo.

Regional only Nobel Prize Winner

Gavrilo Gavro Princip was a close friend of Ivo Andrić (the only Nobel Prize Winner for literature of the region to this day, he received the award in 1961; Andrić felt he was destined to become a writer. He began writing in secondary school, but received little encouragement from his mother. He recalled that when he showed her one of his first works, she replied: "Did you write this? What did you do that for?"). Andrić joined the South Slav student movement Young Bosnia, becoming one of its most prominent members. Andrić had been one of the first to join the Serbo-Croat Progressive Movement (SHNO in 1911).

In late 1911, Andrić was elected the first president of the Serbo-Croat Progressive Movement a Sarajevo-based secret society that promoted unity and friendship between Serb and Croat youth and opposed the Austro-Hungarian occupation. Its members were vehemently criticized by both Serb and Croat nationalists, who dismissed them as "traitors to their nations". Unperturbed by opposing reactions, Andrić continued agitating against the Austro-Hungarians. On 28 February 1912, he spoke before a crowd of 100 student protesters at Sarajevo's railway station, urging them to continue their demonstrations. But Andrić seems to be more shrewd than Princip, for he used to give speeches, but without being actively engaged in the assassination. Andrić has described the "Sarajevo frenzy of hate" that erupted among Muslims, Roman Catholics, and Orthodox believers following the assassination on June 28, 1914, of Archduke Franz Ferdinand in Sarajevo.

As for Andrić literary work, his writings dealt mainly with life in his native Bosnia under Turkish Ottoman rule. Andrić in his short novel titled “The Story of Serf Siman” put these words into the mouth of the old man Siman arguing with a Turkish landlord:

“...četiri stotine godina ste vi jahali nas, sada ćemo četiri stotine godina mi vas, a poslije ćemo se razgovarati ko će koga jahati za onih trećih četiri stotine godina!” in translation: “...You (sc. the Turks) used to ride on us for 400 years and now is our turn to ride on you for the next 400 years; and we will negotiate after that who will ride on whom for the next 400 years”! Frankly speaking, this was a sheer demagogy, totally devoid of reality. How could a Nobel Prize winner write such a majestic nonsense? For there is over 60 million Turks which outnumber any Balkan tribe by ten times, or at least three times all Balkan tribes on aggregate. Besides, Turkey is still a regional power, far more advanced than any Balkan state.

The Background of the Event

Gavrilo Princip was an enthusiastic but unevolved naïve negligent punk hence subject to easy manipulation from foreign secret service agents and army officers, being completely ignorant of the epic tragedy his thoughtless and irresponsible act had inflicted on his own people. There are some indubitable objective indices that the British secret service was deeply involved into the preparation of the assassination, for there was naturally, a bitter rivalry between Britain and Germany as the leading imperial powers in Europe at the time. Quite expectedly, the British crown dynasty (despite themselves of German Sachs-Coburg origin) aimed at suppressing German expansion to the Middle East through the Balkan region (the same scenario was to be repeated in Yugoslavia at the beginning of the WW II in 1941). Objectively speaking, British imperialism being responsible for innumerable acts of atrocities, crimes and anti-human exploitation committed during three long centuries of the British terror against the people of India, China, and other colonial nations (among them the unnatural and unlawful act of separation of the Indus River Valley territory from mother India, now without the river Indus as her essential part by which India was actually named after, India is no more India), was even ten times worse than the oncoming German Nazism.

Even during the cold war in the sixties, seemingly benign “world-invasion” by a pop-group called the Beatles was markedly imperialistic in manner, viz. in 1960, reputedly, John and his best friend at art college, Stu Sutcliffe, came up with the name by analogy with Buddy Holly’s band “the Crickets.” They wanted to get a bug-related name, so the two went through several insect names and finally arrived on “Beetles”. Stu thought of “The Beetles,” but then John, who loved puns and wordplay, thought of changing the spelling to “Beatles,” as they were a beat group. As John was to later elaborate: “It was beat and beetles and when you said it, people thought of crawly things, and when you read it, it was beat music.” However, there was an obvious coincidence between the name of the group and the name of the famous British WW I war-ship destroyer hypocoristically called “the Beetle” (viz. the bug).

In addition, those 4 Beatle guys had been pronounced MBE, viz. Members of the Order of the British Empire. One of them, Paul McCartney a typical small bourgeois conformist, like most of contemporary Scotsmen, except for Sean Connery, a famous actor and Scottish nationalist, who advocates the full independence for Scotland (since the Scotsmen are the only Celtic people who as homeless bums are still without their own sovereign independent state), he used to stupefy youngsters by his stupid songs, some of which are even open plagiarisms viz. Ob-la-di-ob-la-da. The tag line "Ob-la-di, ob-la-da, life goes on, brah" was an expression used by Nigerian conga player Jimmy Scott-Emuakpor, an acquaintance of McCartney. Scott tried to claim a writer's credit for the use of his catchphrase. McCartney said that the phrase was "just an expression", whereas Scott argued that it was not a common expression and was used exclusively by the Scott-Emuakpor family. McCartney was angry that the British press sided with Scott over the issue. Among the Beatles only John Lennon was a man enough to return the honor “in protest against Britain’s involvement in Biafra, support of America in Vietnam, and against Cold Turkey slipping down the charts”.

McCartney even made a song called “Yesterday”, and according to the theory of psychoanalysis, it was a subconscious lament over the lost British Empire, since the British crown lost forever India, China, Hong Kong, and many other colonies (retaining the Falkland Islands only with ca.30 sheep on it). However, the British bad karma will certainly produce in the future some ominous effects and inevitably Britain will disunite, since unlike Yugoslavia, it is an absolutely unnatural union of the 4 different nations, speaking 4 different and mutually unintelligible languages, viz. Scottish, Irish, Welsh, and Anglo-Saxon. And unlike Scotland, though Wales too is not yet an independent state, the Welshmen can be satisfied at least with the usage of the name ‘Britain’ for their missing independence, due to the fact that their native tongue is a Brittonic language of the Celtic language family, so that they may accept the Britain (existing in their mind as the product of their imagination, at least) as their own virtual state. On the other hand, the unwise people of Yugoslavia though all speak the same or at least fully intelligible languages, become destined to disunite because of the lack (viz. due to the assassination) of Wisdom.

The Balkan Karma

The Balkan bad karma -a prolonged winter lacking in sunshine of Wisdom.

Apparently, the very formation of the common state of the South Slavic tribes called Yugoslavia was from the start an unfortunate experiment. Thus inevitably, Yugoslavia was destined to disunite.

Marx and Engels' Prophetic Views

Hence it is not at all surprising what

Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels quite prophetically held about the South Slavs even prior to the formation of their common state:

"This splendid land (the Balkans) has the misfortune to be inhabited by a conglomerate of different races and nationalities, of which it is difficult to say which of them are most incapable of progress and civilization..." (Marx "British politics" 9.04.1853);

"... There is no country in Europe which does not have in some corner or other one or several ruined fragments of peoples, the remnant of a former population that was suppressed and held in bondage by the nation which later became the main vehicle of historical development. These relics of a nation mercilessly trampled under foot in the course of history, as Hegel says, these residual fragments of peoples always become fanatical standard-bearers of counter-revolution and remain so until their complete extirpation or loss of their national character, just as their whole existence in general is itself a protest against a great historical revolution. ...These are in Austria the South Slavs... Among all the large and small nations of Austria, only three standard-bearers of progress took an active part in history, and still retain their vitality — the Germans, the Poles and the Magyars. Hence they are now revolutionary. All the other large and small nationalities and peoples are destined to perish before long in the revolutionary world storm. For that reason they are now counter-revolutionary. But at the first victorious uprising of the French proletariat, which Louis Napoleon is striving with all his might to conjure up, the Austrian Germans and Magyars will be set free and wreak a bloody revenge on the Slav barbarians. The general war which will then break out will smash this Slav Sonderbund and wipe out all these petty hidebound nations, down to their very names. The next world war will result in the disappearance from the face of the earth not only of reactionary classes and dynasties, but also of entire reactionary peoples. And that, too, is a progress." (Engels, "the Magyar Struggle" [Kampf Der Magyarische] 13.01.1849)

Conclusion

Save the enlightenment of springtime there's no light for the Balkan tribes deprived of Wisdom assassinated.
